By Mary Hadsall, Executive Director

I am humbled by

Our beautiful country is struggling, unemployment is high; concerns loom over the state of the economy and the availability of affordable healthcare. Nonprofit organizations have been hit hard financially, yet together we haven't lost sight of our dream of freedom and independence through horsemanship for people who have disabilities.

As I closed our 2008/2009 fiscal year, I saw the strength in our community reflected in the numbers on my financial reports. This is very encouraging and we have you, our supporters, seasoned and new, to thank for this remarkable fact. This good news tells me some important things.

First and foremost, even during the most difficult of times, our community is not afraid to support Camelot. It also tells me loud and clear that you value

A Camelot Student Shares her Story

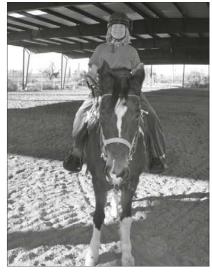

By Judy Witt, Camelot Student

Little did I realize in spring 2007 that I would soon begin what has turned out to be the most self-satisfying experience of my wheelchair life. I have the Camelot program, facility, staff and volunteers to thank for that!

My time with horses began in Phoenix in the early '60s as I got to spend quality time with my Aunt Stonie and Uncle Buzz Sutton, and the Maricopa County Sheriff's Posse. Taking part in rodeos as a child was awesome, the West in action for this young Indiana girl! Weekend camping, riding and rodeos thrilled me.

Years later, I rode at stables and even on a cruise vacation. We owned and boarded horses in southern California for several months next to the Poway rodeo grounds. But then my three sons switched interest to sports, and I started teaching again.

So when I saw the Camelot booth at the Disability Expo held at the Phoenix Convention Center, along with all the activities available, I hesitantly asked the women at the booth if I was too old. Michelle Bartlett, a riding instructor at Camelot, smiled and answered, "No, you're not too old," as she handed me an application. I didn't think riding would be in my future after nine years in a wheelchair.

After filling out forms, interviewing with the executive director, Mary Hadsall, and getting my go-ahead, I sat and simply cried. This was too good to be true! I read and highlighted the curriculum I was given with all kinds of information on horses, safety, tack, expectations and vocabulary.

the power of horse therapy.

Thanks to those of you seated at the Round Table, who support us financially, we are gratefully looking forward to a very busy fall. We have a full student schedule coupled with enthusiastic volunteers and staff that are eager for another great lesson year.

This edition of Camelot Chronicles is dedicated to our devoted volunteers. That includes all of you who have been sharing Camelot with your friends, family and co-workers. Last winter, I asked you to turn to your own personal circles of influence to bring awareness to our programs and services, and most important, our mission. I asked you to seek financial support on our behalf, because as our circle of support grows, our strength grows exponentially.

You did just that, making it clear that now is not the time to slow our efforts. Together we are riding through this storm of economic instability and while doing so, our students can focus on what's most important: conquering their dragons of fear and doubt. Thank you for believing in Camelot.

Once a Cowgirl...

Mary started me bareback on Paladin, a wide and gentle draft horse, in the arena to assess my stability. I had volunteers on all sides, felt breathless but safe. I even had to "sing" so Mary knew I was breathing!

My next horse was Bravo, followed by a stint in the cart with Cayanna. That was exciting and my first time "driving" since 1997. Currently, I usually ride Scout, although I love all of them. They are so gentle and patient.

My balance, arm and leg strength have improved with weekly rides. All

The Power of a Volunteer

By Chuck Johnson, Camelot Parent, Board Member & Student

In 1988, my eight-year-old daughter was diagnosed with an auto immune neuromuscular disease. The pediatric neurologist who diagnosed her disease suggested that she also had something else going on, a form of muscular dystrophy. "I just saw your father walk down the hall," he said. "I think you got it from him."

So began our introduction to the world of disability. That journey led us to one of the most wonderful places on Earth for persons with disabilities and for the volunteers without whom Camelot could not exist.

Camelot is a healing place of therapy for persons with physical disabilities that allows people who need help to walk or see to enjoy the freedom that can only be experienced on the back of a horse.

Camelot's ranch is a 14.2 acre nature oasis in the Sonoran Desert, filled with Gambel's Quail, jackrabbits, cottontails, lizards and roadrunners, and eight horses. Once located "out in the desert" when it was built, it is now in the middle of housing developments built during the past 10 years within 100 feet of Camelot's boundaries.

The program is funded 100% by donations; no fees are charged to students, who "pay" for their lessons by giving back to their community.

Volunteers make Camelot possible. From mucking out stalls (it's even worse than it sounds, but the horses surely appreciate it), to working with students, each volunteer is an integral member of the teaching team at Camelot, where students not only learn to ride but also are instructed in all aspects of equine care and riding. Camelot teaches self reliance: each volunteer models what that means throughout the person-to-person contact with the students. Camelot volunteers are also valued contributors to that necessary bane of non-profit endeavors: fund raising.

Each year, Camelot hosts its Hooves & Heroes fundraiser. Volunteers solicit auction items, prepare those items to be presented at the event, spruce up the ranch, serve as photographers, determine winning bids, collect donations, entertain guests, and conduct the post-event clean up. Hooves & Heroes, and those photocaptured priceless moments, are not only appreciated by us parents, but are oh-so-useful in our year-round fund raising efforts. And, Camelot can always rely on our volunteers' financial generosity as well as their time and talents.

Five years ago, I joined the Camelot board of directors. And, three years ago, that pediatric neurologist's 1988 diagnosis of my own muscular dystrophy resulted in one of those blessings which often appear disguised as tragedy: I became a student at Camelot. As a parent of a former student, a longtime volunteer, a board member, and now as a student myself, words cannot express the gratitude / I have for the volunteers of Camelot.

my doctors noted significant improvements in my physical health in 2008 in comparison to 2007. Being outside in the fresh air and the warm sun, enjoying the horses, caring adult instructors and volunteers has make a difference not to only my physical health, but also my mental and spiritual you to Dr. Vicki Baumler and Dr. Jamie Foley for all of the amazing care they have given Cayanna during her healing process!

A special thank

Mary Westheimer & Kevin Caron

Cayanna was diagnosed with laminitis in June and has been under the watchful care of her doctors, staff, volunteers and fellow equine instructors. Although healing is slow, we are seeing improvement.

This little mare is famous around Camelot for her big personality, long beautiful golden mane and tail and especially for her versatility. She helps teach driving, vaulting, English and Western riding to Camelot students. This little horse does a big job and has an even bigger responsibility to make horse dreams come true!

is a student, volunteer and Camelot supporter who embodies the philosophies of our program. She has been a Camelot rider since 2003 and has volunteered in various capacities for nearly as long, choosing Camelot as her outlet to give back to the community. She is part of the circle of giving, and her gifts are reflected in lives she has touched.

For the past several years, Tami has worked alongside other students after her own lessons, mentoring young riders in horse skills and outdoor education. She has also been instrumental during our Hooves & Heroes events, enlisting support from her family, especially her husband, John, who brought Starbucks on board as a Hooves & Heroes contributor.

Starbucks provides great coffee and tea, and Starbucks employees also volunteer their valuable time at the event. They donate all the proceeds from their sales to our program.

Thank you, Tami, for all you have done for Camelot and the community!

WHAT CAN I TELL FRIENDS ABOUT CAMELOT?

For the past 26 years, Camelot's mission has been to improve the quality of life for children and adults with disabilities through programs of horsemanship and outdoor education, which develop self-worth, independence and active participation in the community.

IS CAMELOT A MEMBER OF UNITED WAY?

Camelot is not a member agency, which means we do not receive United Way funds, but qualified nonmember agencies have the opportunity to receive donations from you, through the Donor Choice Program.

CAMELOT & UNITED WAY

Every penny truly makes a difference, especially in the operation of small grass roots programs like Camelot. One way to lend a helping hand is through the United Way Donor Choice Program that begins in September.

This is an easy way for you to have a donation deducted regularly from your paycheck to be given to your favorite charitable organization. And remember, no amount is too small to make a big difference!
